CHARLES-TOWN, JUNE 7.

OUR last Accounts from Auguſta, regarding the Congreſs that was to be holden there, are more favourable than our former. We are now adviſed, that between 3 and 400 Cherokees, and 200 Creeks were there on the 31ſt ult. and ſo well diſpoſed to complete the Ceſſion of the Body of Land they had allotted for the Payment of their Debts to the Traders, that, that Buſineſs was not only likely to be accompliſhed, but it was alſo probable Sir James Wright would ſucceed in obtaining a farther and very conſiderable Ceſſion. The Hon. John Stuart arrived at Auguſta on the 20th paſt, and His Excellency Sir James Wright, Bart. on the 21ſt, where the latter was received with every Mark of Reſpect due to his Rank and Merit. And the Congreſs was propoſed to be opened on the 1ſt or 2d Inſtant.

"Twenty Creeks lately went out on an Expedition againſt the Choctah's, and were ſo bold as to penetrate amongſt their Towns, where, lying in Ambuſcade near one of their Watering-Places, they ſaw two Choctah's coming for Water, at whom they fired; one was killed, the other made his Eſcape, and alarmed the Town, the Inhabitants whereof immediately ran to Arms, and went in Purſuit of the Enemy. The Creeks finding themſelves diſcovered, made off as faſt as they could, but miſtaking their Road, went direct upon another Town of the Choctahs, which alſo being alarmed, they had no other Choice left them than to ſell their Lives as dear as they could: They fought till Night, when, moſt of their Number being killed, the Reſt, finding themſelves cut off from every other Means of Eſcape, threw themſelves into a Pond that was near, and kept themſelves under Water to their Mouths and Noſes: The Choctahs, in Order to find them out, cut Canes with ſharp Ends, and went puſhing and poking about in the Water, till they found them all out but one, who, although he was puſhed at and pricked two or three Times, withſtood the Pain, and, after the Choctahs had gone off with thoſe they found, made his Eſcape, and came home alone with the bad News."——This Piece of Intelligence, it is ſaid, was one Reaſon, why the Creeks did not come to the Congreſs ſo early, or in ſo great a Number, as was expected: Another is ſaid to be, an Inſinuation thrown out amongſt them, by ſome Cherokees, that the Deſign of the white People, in collecting ſo many Head men of both Nations together, was, to cut them all off, and thereby gain eaſy Poſſeſſion of their whole Country.

Our Planters have been very unfortunate this Seaſon, in an almoſt total Loſs of the firſt Cutting of their Crop of Indico, which would have been very conſiderable, but for the dry Weather, and a deſtructive Bug that it produced: However, the Seaſon is not unfavourable to thoſe Rice Planters, whoſe Dependance is upon deep Swamps.

Nothing could have happened more injurious to the Britiſh Merchants concerned in the Slave Trade, than the recent Stop put to the granting of Lands, at the ſame Time that the Firſt Cutting of Indico is loſt: But for theſe Events, the Cargoes of Negroes now here (tho' many have arrived almoſt together) would have been ſold at conſiderably higher Prices than they are now likely to be.

The General Aſſembly of this Province ſtands adjourned to the 7th of next Month

The General Aſſembly of North Carolina is prorogued to the 5th of October next.

Friday laſt being our moſt gracious Sovereign's Birth-Day, when His Majeſty entered into the Thirty-ſixth Year of his Age; the ſame was obſerved here with unuſual Demonſtrations of Affection, Loyalty, and Joy. The Day was uſhered in with ringing of Bells, and all the Forts, Baſtions, and Shipping diſplayed their Colours. The Charles-Town Regiment of Foot Militia, now divided into Eight Companies, and commanded by Colonel Charles Pinckney, was reviewed by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, who was pleaſed to expreſs great Pleaſure at their Appearance, and pay particular Attention to the new Light Infantry Company (now the 8th) commanded by Captain Macartan Campbell, as they performed their Exerciſes with uncommon Dexterity and Regularity, conſidering the very ſhort Time they had been in training, not a Month. The Artillery Company (formed in the Year 1757) were likewiſe reviewed, and performed to Admiration, like Veterans. At Noon Royal Salutes were fired at the Forts, and by the Artillery Company, ſucceeded by General Vollies from the Militia. His Honour, upon this Occaſion, gave a very elegant Entertainment, prepared by Mrs. Swallow, in the Council-Chamber, to the Members of the Council and Aſſembly, all the Public Officers, the Clergy, &c. where the uſual, and ſome other Toaſts were drank, followed by Diſcharges of Cannon from the Artillery Company. The Artillery Company dined together at Mr. Creighton's in King-Street. The Light Infantry Company alſo had an elegant Dinner at Mrs. Stevens's on the Bay, and entertained a good Deal of other Company there; and the Toaſts drank by them, were ſucceeded by Diſcharges of Cannon from Capt. Attwood's Sloop. The Evening, like the Day, was ſpent in decent Joy and Feſtivity, without one ſingle Accident happening.

On the 22ſt ult. the Brigt. Hannah, of Boſton, Samuel Whitmarſh, Maſter, ſaid to have Four Tons of prohibited Tea on board, and the Sloop ——— of Rhode-Iſland, ——— Williams, Maſter, ſaid to have 20 Hogſheads of Foreign Rum on board, were brought into New-Providence, having been ſeized at Turks-Iſland, by the Tender of His Majeſty's Sloop Savage. The next Day His Majeſty's armed Scooner St. Lawrence, commanded by Lieut. Ralph Dundaſs, ſailed for Boſton, from Providence. During the Five Years Capt. Dundaſs was on that Station, he made ſeveral Seizures, prevented Smuggling, and promoted the juſt Intereſts of Trade: He executed his Duty with Rigour, without diſcovering either Rapaciouſneſs or Self-Intereſt, and generally gained the Goodwill even of ſuch as were unlucky enough to fall into his Hands, but he deſpiſed making a Trade of his Duty, or to act unlike a Gentleman.

In the Evening of Sunday the 30th paſt, the Body of the old Orphan-Houſe, lately converted into an Academy, was entirely conſumed by Fire, ſuppoſed to be occaſioned by Lightning. By timely Aſſiſtance, the two new Wings were providentially ſaved.

Laſt Thurſday arrived here the Comet Packet-Boat, and Yeſterday the Diligence, commanded by Capt. Arthur Clark, both with Mails from Jamaica and Penſacola.

Lieutenant Thomas, of the Royal Regiment of Artillery, Mrs. Thomas, Mr. Roſs, and Mr. Mitchell, are arrived here from Penſacola, in the Diligence Packet-Boat.

Saturday ſailed in the Brigt. Friendſhip, Captain Moore, for Philadelphia, Dr. Williamſon of that City, Mr. Caw of Grenada, Mrs. Gillon, Miſs Pickering, and ſome others of this Place.

Saturday laſt arrived off this Bar, and this Day came into the Harbour, His Majeſty's Frigate the Lizard, of 28 Guns, commanded by Charles Inglis, Eſq; laſt from the Southward.

Captain Francis Dickinſon, who arrived here Yeſterday in 13 Days from Jamaica, brings Advice, that a Frigate arrived at Cape Nicola about Ten Days ago from France, ſtationed there to prevent the ſmuggling of Coffee and Sugars.

The TEMPLE of FORTUNE.

AS many altars have been erected to Fortune as to any divinity. The worship of this goddess is as old as the world; and, we may presume, will continue till human nature is extinct. She had formerly a very famous temple at Præneste, which she often visited. Magnificence and taste conspired to adorn this temple; marble, gold, and precious stones shed their lustre all around it. Its sanctuary seemed to be embellished with all the treasures of Ophir, and the other fortunate islands.

Master-pieces of painting and sculpture completed this magnificence. The destiny of those whom Fortune had raised to the summit of grandeur, or precipitated to the abyss of misery, was here presented to your view, in their statues, or their portraits. Here you saw Cyrus upon a throne, and Crœsus upon a burning pile; Pyrrhus victorious in one battle, and vanquished in another; Hannibal triumphing in Italy, and poisoning himself in Greece; the head of Pompey presented to Cæsar, and the same Cæsar stabbed before the statue of that unfortunate Hero. Here you saw Semiramis raised to the throne from a private station; and other Queens descending from sovereignty to servitude. In short, every object here evinced the power of Fortune; and informed you that she humbles as easily and abruptly as she exalts.

Hither her votaries come to implore her bounty. Some likewise come hither to request her to take back her gifts. And it is said that they to whom she granted the latter favour found it not inferior to the former. People had not access to this temple at pleasure. They were to seize the moment when entrance was permitted, and they were not prepared by any signal. Fortune is a coy and irresolute mistress; she stimulates hope; but, she makes no promises. He who is without penetration, presence of mind, and a passion for adventure, supplicates this goddess in vain. One day, when she had repaired to her temple, to deliver her oracles, on a sudden the sounding gates flew open. An eager croud pressed forward; but one only, at a time, could enter the sanctuary; or a company, who had, each, the same petition to offer. Every one made way for a man clothed in purple, who advanced with a majestic pace.—It was Trajan. He approached the altar; and addressed this prayer to the goddess:—'Fortune, thou hast made me master of a vast empire; and I shall not request thee to make it more extensive. I have fought, and I have triumphed. But the bad success, which I have sometimes experienced in war, hath convinced me that the glory of a conqueror is transient, and unworthy of anxiety. I renounce ambition; for it is always fatal to mankind. This empire is already too large, if it is not peopled with happy subjects. My satisfaction can only be proportionable to theirs. But a Monarch is a man, and therefore fallible; he may deceive himself, or be deceived by others. Cries of distress have reached my ears, and banished from my heart that serenity and peace which I would wish every individual of my empire might enjoy. While I heal one wound, I leave many others open. Fortune, resume thy favours, or restore me my tranquillity of mind. What advantages does a throne bestow, if it gives not efficacy to our benevolence; if the ardent, but fruitless desire to make our subjects happy, precludes our private felicity?'

Here Trajan was silent; and he was thus answered by a voice which issued from the innermost recess of the sanctuary:—'I have bestowed upon you grandeur and power: I have made you Sovereign of the Masters of the universe. Protect them, and make them happy to the uttermost of your power. Their complaints ought only to afflict you in proportion as they are just. Spare no application, spare not your treasures to relieve them; and, remember, my favours are always mixed with misfortunes. You are a mortal, and you would enjoy the pure felicity of the gods.'

The Emperor withdrew to meditate upon this answer. One of his Ministers was the next petitioner.—'Goddess, said he, I owe every thing to you. Deign to continue still propitious to me. My present high station inflamed my ambition before I possessed it; I should now wish to quit it, if I might retire with credit. I am immoderately flattered, and severely censured. I may sometimes have been mistaken; but I know I have done good to mankind; yet I am as much reproached for my humane offices as my faults. Of you, O goddess, I request the affection of the public: Every sublunary good it is in your power to bestow: Honours, esteem, reputation, and glory are all at your disposal. Finish what you have begun in my favour. To you I owe the approbation of the Monarch; give me likewise the universal esteem of his subjects.'

'Your request is beyond my power, interrupted the oracle. Be assured those above whom you are placed will always view you with a jealous eye. They whom I overlook have a perspective right to censure my favourites: It is their only consolation for my neglect of them.'

A third supplicant approached the altar. He was a Courtier. He advanced with as much importance in his face, as if he had been going to the levee of his Prince. He made the following speech to the goddess:—'In me you see the most zealous of your adorers. I pay all my vows to you; I pursue the conduct which you seem to point me out. Every morning I pay my devoirs to Trajan; I often have the honour to sup with him. I flatter his Ministers, and even the substitutes of his Ministers, I caress my rivals; I pay assiduous court to the ladies. These arts are generally successful; but they have not yet raised me to an elevated station. Twenty governments have been given away since I solicited one; twenty Officers, unknown at Court, have been made Generals. Their promotion, O Fortune, is an insult to your divinity! Raise me to honours, and you will signalize your power. My conduct shall convince the world that I depend entirely upon you.'

'One art, replied the oracle, you have yet to learn; to wait with patient expectation. I shall soon lay waste a province which owes its support to its innocence and industry. You shall be appointed its Governor. I intend to humble the pride of the Romans; you shall command one of the armies.'

Julia came forward; she shone in jewels and in beauty, 'I too have my ambition, said she to the goddess. I am counted handsome. I am the idol of many lovers. Perhaps their passion for me is but weak: But that is a circumstance which I little regard. It is personal glory, not ardent admiration which I solicit. Let my lovers be inconstant; I am inconstant myself. Credit and glory are the objects of my ambition. My late husband, who aspired not to any thing, not even to please me, died forgotten by all those whom he forgot while he lived. My soul is as active and ardent as his was torpid and cold. I want to be the firſt favourite of the Empreſs to procure the ſmiles of Trajan for whom I pleaſe; govern his Miniſters, diſpoſe of places, draw the mean from obſcurity, and, with a word of my diſpleaſure, annihilate the Great. In ſhort, I would have all the men my vaſſals, and I would drive all the women to deſpair.'

'Expect nothing from me, replied the oracle.—I have given you beauty, birth, the arts of your ſex, and ambition. You are ſtrong enough; you may open the campaign when you pleaſe; you need no auxiliary.

Julia left the ſanctuary, determined to avail herſelf of her powers. An enormous and miſhapen maſs advanced towards the altar. It was one of thoſe who receive the revenues of the State for the Emperor, and for themſelves; a defaulter of millions. I thought that he was going to requeſt the goddeſs that ſhe would allow him to convert the whole finances of the empire to his own emolument. On the contrary he deplored the effects of his opulence. 'O Fortune, ſaid he, I have paid dearly for thy gifts! I once exiſted; but I exiſt no longer! Born under a rural roof, I was employed in rural labours. The fields which my hands cultivated ſufficed for my ſubſiſtance. My appetites and my ſentiments were innocently and agreeably indulged. The genuine wants of my nature were ſatisfied. Health and exerciſe ſeaſoned my ſimple meals. Lycoris liſtened to and approved my paſſion. I loved Lycoris, and ſhe gave me a reciprocation of love. I was happy; but I ſet not a proper value upon my happineſs. A ſplendid car was overturned at a little diſtance from my retreat. I offered my aſſiſtance, and it was accepted. The Lady whom I obliged on this occaſion was wont to confer, not to receive favours. She was the wife of the Emperor Nerva's Prime Miniſter. She deigned to lodge in my hut, and was pleaſed to think that I was in a ſtation inferior to my deſerts. She preſſed me to accompany her to the Court. Her beauty was inchanting; her car was brilliant, and her retinue was numerous. I was dazzled with what I ſaw, and intoxicated with the ideas which ſhe infuſed into my imagination. I forſook Lycoris, and followed Hortenſia. Time, which produces ſtrange revolutions in the human mind, wrought no change in regard for me, which, ſhe convinced me, was as warm as ever, after we had been acquainted for two years. I was, by her intereſt, made a farmer of the public revenues. Gold flowed as it were ſpontaneouſly into my coffers from Europe, Aſia, and Africa. My wealth embarraſſes my calculations, or rather I think it ſuperfluous to keep accounts. But what have I got by this imaginary gain! I have accumulated riches; but I have loſt my peace of mind. I have the beſt cook in Rome, yet I have no appetite: I keep twenty miſtreſſes, whom I pay extravagantly, yet not one of them loves me; my deſires are multiplied; my powers of gratifying them are diminiſhed: I have many flatterers, but not a friend. A ſatiety, which has blunted all my perceptions, deadens my ſplendor, and renders my delicacies inſipid. I have exhauſted all the means of enjoyment, and yet I have enjoyed nothing. Deign then, O goddeſs, to reſtore me my health, my ſtrength, my rural labours, my taſte for moderate pleaſures, my love, and my Lycoris. For theſe ineſtimable poſſeſſions I will give up two hundred flatterers, five hundred hogſheads of Falernian wine, my miſtreſſes, and a treaſure of ſome millions.'

'Make yourſelf eaſy, ſaid the oracle to him. This very evening Trajan will ſtrike your name out of the fortunate liſt. Your wealth will be confiſcated. Your flatterers will vaniſh. Your miſtreſſes will dupe your ſucceſſor. You ſhall return to your cottage where you will find that you have loſt for ever the ſtrong tone of rural health, and that the bloom of youth is fled from Lycoris."

The lively Aglaia ſucceeded the heavy Ciſonius. She was ſcarce fifteen. Her genteel and eaſy ſhape; her ſoft, yet piercing eye; her fine and animated features; a graceful negligence of air; charms played off with art under the appearance of ſimplicity;—in ſhort, her beauty and her manner ſhewed that nature had formed her to make conqueſts, and that ſhe was ambitious of amorous triumph. She came to ſupplicate Fortune to be propitious to her. I have, ſaid ſhe, my views; but, without you, I can do nothing. My hair, you ſee, is negligent and unornamented. My dreſs is almoſt as ſimple as that of a Veſtal; the Granges hath, as yet, produced no pearls or diamonds for me. I borrowed the car which has brought me to your temple. How long, O goddeſs, will you withhold from me female embelliſhments, the artillery of my ſex? Vouchſafe to conduct my ſteps; point out to me the path in which I muſt tread; I here ſolemnly ſwear to you that I will never depart from it. I have been told that you are often thwarted by love. But through me he ſhall never controul you, I will treat him like a child; I may careſs him for a while; but I will diſmiſs him without ceremony. Let the inamoured and the impolitic be his worſhippers; I will burn incenſe only on your altar."

The following anſwer was given to Aglaia. 'Nature has done ſo much for, that little remains for Fortune to do. Learn to dance, and go upon the ſtage. You will help me to fleece ſome Courtiers who abuſe my favours.'

Oh times! oh manners! oh ungrateful age! cried one whoſe mind, by his gait and exclamation, ſeemed violently agitated. Oh Fortune, on what wretches is thy bounty laviſhed! How many modern Mœviuſes, by thy partiality, ſnatch the laurel from Virgil! I dedicate my life to glory, and glory makes me no return. I am a victim to genius. Pleaſure and ſleep are ſtrangers to me. When Phœbus hath left this hemiſphere; when Diana hath performed half her nocturnal courſe; when the mechanic has quitted his labour; when the ſlave ſleeps from his toil; when nature is at reſt—I ſhall write. Aurora leaves the arms of old Titan; her mild rays enlighten the ſummit of the mountains; the watchful cock crows; the birds anſwer him with their varied concerts; Lycas awakes, and preſſes the lips of Tymaretta with a tender kiſs—and I ſtill write.—Julia has already received many a compliment at her toilet; Caſca preſides at the adjuſting of her hair; ſhe checks the impertinence of Lyſis with a ſlight ſtroke, and he kiſſes the hand which ſmote him. From the toilette they go to dinner; after dinner they fly to the Circus; they diſapprove, or they applaud. They leave the Circus to go to new amuſements—And I ſtill write! A lamp burns to give light to a company who laugh, and they enjoy themſelves without beſtowing a thought upon it. So I illuminate an ungrateful public, who forget that a lamp muſt be ſoon extinguiſhed, if it is not fed. I write profoundly, and my readers are ſuperficial. I adorn my works with artful, delicate and animated ſtrokes, to command attention; to ſtrength of argument I add the warmth and colouring of imagination. My talents, I own, have been acknowledged by the judicious few; but the men, whom none could ever praiſe, enjoy your favour. Deign to anſwer me, O goddeſs! will you ſtill continue to be propitious only to thoſe who are dead to a ſenſe of ſhame?'

The oracle made him this reply: 'The favourites of glory are ſeldom mine. Write leſs; write ill, if you pleaſe. But viſit my temple more frequently. I ſometimes grant to importunity what I refuſe to merit.'

'O Fortune, cried a woman, who ſeemed to have no reaſon to complain of her, you have been very bountiful to me. I have had the honour to ruin ten wealthy Patricians, and three Plebeians, who were ten times richer than the Patricians. My luxury eclipſes that of the moſt magnificent Roman ladies. I have the advantage of them both in captivating and in dazzling. The former ſuperiority they will more readily forgive me than the latter. My taſte gives law to the capital. I am copied in all the complicated variety of polite life; and I have ſo many imitators, that I fear I ſhall ſoon have rivals. Deign, O goddeſs, to preſerve my pre-eminence.—Teach me the way to be always inimitable.'

'Be totally the reverſe of what you are,' anſwered the oracle.

'Goddeſs, ſaid one as he advanced, whoſe appearance beſpoke him an enemy to pomp, in me you have a votary whoſe taſte does honour to the capital of the world. I have a paſſion for ſhells, and it is my only paſſion. Into ſhells I have converted all the gold which I amaſſed, when I was a Governor in in Spain. Natural hiſtory is a fine thing. I have often given an emerald for a petrified oyſter. I purchaſe curioſities from the moſt diſtant Courts at a great expence. It is true, I have impoveriſhed myſelf by enriching my collection, and am now obliged to live upon vegetables. That, however, I do not regret. But unluckily my treaſure is exhauſted, and I have not yet ſhells enough. My alcove is yet to adorn, my dining-room, and a cloſet. Grant me then this requeſt, O goddeſs: Let Trajan once more make me Governor of a province; with the ſpoil of it, I will ſtrip India of its rarities. My happineſs will never be completed till I complete my collection.'

'Be comforted, replied the oracle; you may yet complete your collection. You prefer ſhells and foſſils to your wife, whom a certain virtuoſo prefers to his large magazine of curioſities. He will ſoon propoſe to you an * exchange which will be agreeable to the three parties.'

The collector of ſhells retired, in hopes that the oracle would in a little time be accompliſhed. The aſſembly grew tumultuous; every one preſſed forward without regard to order.

A diſciple of Hermes intreated Fortune to help him to the diſcovery of the grand ſecret. She promiſed him that ſhe would break his furnaces, his crucibles, and his retorts; the only way ſhe could think of to ſave him from ruin. A rich miſer petitioned her to procure him ſleep. That born, replied ſhe, you ſhall ſoon enjoy. You are this moment robbed of your treaſure, which hindered you from reſting. A lady who loved play begged ſhe would reſtore her what ſhe had the night before loſt at quadrille. I will give you an opportunity to remember yourſelf, anſwered the goddeſs. Craſſus will indemnify you, if you are reaſonable in your terms. A Prieſt of Jupiter aſpired to the pontificate. To corroborate his ſuit, he pleaded his health weakened by ſtudy, and his indifference to women. The goddeſs adviſed him to be more careful of his conſtitution, and to have more intercourſe with the fair ſex. Many more petitions were offered by people of different ſtations. They were accepted, or rejected; and ſome of the moſt extravagant ones were not the worſt received. There was a ſlave to whom Fortune promiſed the wealth, the office, and the miſtreſs of his maſter; ſhe ordered an orator to quit the roſtra, and turn buffoon; and to a buffoon ſhe promiſed the reputation of an orator. Her votaries were as ridiculous as many of her decrees. A butcher was adorned with the robe of Eſculapius; a timid and feminine youth was armed with a Herculean club; and a brave and robuſt Centurion was dreſſed like a petit-maître.

A young couple kept apart, and ſeemed to wait for the diſperſion of the croud, to approach the ſanctuary. They were Leuxis and Zelida. They ſeemed to be two lovers; but married, to retain their mutual affection; they ſeemed actuated by the ſame deſires; for they approached the altar together. Leuxis addreſſed the goddeſs; and his petition muſt have appeared new even to Fortune, though accuſtomed to the various and extravagant wiſhes of mankind.

We implore not thy favours, oh goddeſs! Beſtow them upon thoſe whom love is not ſufficient to make happy, and, if love gives them not complete bliſs, from what are they to expect felicity! I am happy in Zelida; and Zelida is happy in me. I won her heart from many rivals who were your favourites. They offered her wealth; I only offered her love. Love alone is the tributary worthy of beauty. We quitted the noiſe, the glitter, and the pride of Rome. Happineſs flies from tumult and ſplendor. Happineſs we enjoy far from envy and ambition, in a retreat which ſeems to have been the deſtined aſylum of innocence. A ſerenity and gentle gaiety are the characteriſtics of true happineſs; ſhe aſſumes not the ſevere aſpect of pride, nor the extravagant glare of grandeur. Our employments give a zeſt to our recreations. I cultivate my little patrimony which yields us a comfortable ſubſiſtence: I prune the tree which my father planted. Thoſe unhappy people, who are condemned to labour of which they reap not the fruit, are the objects of Zelida's benevolence. Tender hearts are always humane; the unfeeling are always cruel. Our wiſh is, that we may never change our diſpoſitions nor our conduct. Every new ſun is a preſage to us of a happy day. Can thoſe, O goddeſs, to whom you are moſt prodigal of your bounty, carry their boaſt ſo far? Let us continue in poſſeſſion of the bleſſings which we enjoy. Retrench not from the favours which you have already granted us; nor make any addition to them. You will have votaries enough who will requeſt you to remember them: We, on the contrary, beg to be forgotten by Fortune.

This perhaps was the only rational addreſs which had ever been made to the goddeſs. It was immediately granted; and the oracle diſmiſſed the aſſembly with this maxim: —— 'Miſtaken mortals, who are ſo apt to err in your ſearch after happineſs, learn from the example of this happy pair, that ſhe reſides not in my empire. Fortune can give you wealth and power; but true and permanent felicity is the reward of moderation and virtue.'
